Sanctions in International Policy: Expectations and Reality

Special Issue of R-Economy

The topic of international sanctions attracts considerable attention of the scientific and expert community. Now discussions mainly focus on analysis the impact of sanctions on the economy of a particular country, their acceptability as an instrument of international policy. At the same time, insufficient attention is paid to the study of the complex impact of sanctions at the regional, national and international levels, the specifics of the instruments of sanctions policy, and the assessment of their effectiveness.

This special issue is devoted to the main challenges of the sanctions policy that are faced by both the countries directly subjected to sanctions and the international community as a whole.

We welcome submissions (review articles are acceptable) that addresses issues related to (but not limited) to the following topics:

- Sanctions: evolution of definition, types, approaches to classification.
- Modern history of economic sanctions implementation.
- Smart sanctions: wishful thinking and true attack.
- Sanctions and digital economy development. Can sanctions stop or stimulate the processes of digital transformation?
- Political, spatial and social impacts of sanction policy.
- Estimation methods of sanctions consequences.
- State policy of countering economic sanctions. How to reduce sanctions risks.
- Adaptation models and behavior of economic agents in conditions of sanctions.

Deadline and Submissions details:

Final Paper Submissions Deadline: 30 June, 2022

You can upload your manuscript via our online submission system.

Please carefully read through the Author Guidelines and prepare your manuscript according to these instructions.

Editor

Prof. Irina Turgel, Ural Federal University, Russia

i.d.turgel@urfu.ru